

Your doctor is CERTIFIED. Your lawyer is CERTIFIED. Is your accountant?

If your accountant isn't a Certified Public Accountant, think twice about where you're getting your advice. In Maryland, CPAs must be certified by the State to practice.

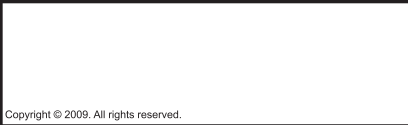

ACCOUNTANTS DO NOT.

To be certified, CPAs must:

- pass a rigorous examination,
- adhere to strict ethical and professional standards,
- complete 80 hours of continuing education every two years.

Whom do you want handling YOUR financial and business matters? Only CPAs are equipped to address your full range of financial needs with integrity and insight.

Make sure your accountant or financial advisor is a CPA.
